

Plant Stand

By Ian Elliott

I have not been doing any turning this week, as I have been making a freestanding plant stand for our back garden. Our back garden faces north so we do not get much sun, we planted gravel several years ago as nothing would grow.

We are still socially isolating, so decided we would like to grow some salad, herbs and a few flowers. I ordered treated softwood, which was delivered on Tuesday morning. I had already made a sketch of what we wanted so started straight away. I just finished before the rain came down (Thursday afternoon). I have no idea how many screws I have used, but it is well into the hundreds, big thank you to the people who came up with the idea of a battery screwdriver.

I have now got to fill all the troughs job for tomorrow if the rain keeps off, plants and seeds are on order. I know its probably a bit late, but we just came up with the idea.

Hope you are all Safe and Well
